Clackamas Community College will celebrate the opening of its new Veterans Education and Training Center on Dec. 18 in DeJardin Hall.

The center is aimed at helping veterans and active military personnel better navigate the terrain of higher education, according to Bill Zuelke, a dean at the college. A CCC veterans affairs officer will give advice on taking advantage of the education and health benefits earned from the service, as well as coordinate regular workshops on education, training, and business.

The opening, which begins at 9 a.m., features former U.S. Rep. Darlene Hooley, who helped begin the congressional campaign for the center's funds.
