Sixty years of Community Education

In the early years of Community Education, a wide range of classes could be taken at school-based partner locations across the service district and supported anyone who could gather enough people in their local area to run classes in a wide range of subjects. This included both leisure activity-based classes, as well as continuing and job-related education. Many of the courses that started as Community Education now fall under different departments as the college has grown, but we still partner across the district to provide a variety of learning opportunities. During the 1966-67 academic year the college started its Community Education program by assuming responsibility for most of the adult education classes previously operated by the high schools in the area.

One of the key themes that has remained throughout the history of Community Education at CCC is collaboration. Today, our programs operate through collaboration from parks and recreation districts, school districts and nonprofit organizations all over Clackamas County. By working together, we provide high-quality learning opportunities to thousands of community members throughout our service district.

We value your input as we work to shape the future of Community Education at CCC. Together, with our partners, we aim to design programs that are relevant, accessible and impactful.
